

22 January 2010

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASESA ROADLINK PARTNERS WITH JOHANNESBURG METRO POLICE DEPARTMENT

SA Roadlink is proud to be the first luxury coach company to have approached the Johannesburg Metro Police Department (JMPD) to make sure that every coach that leaves its premises is roadworthy.

Today, South Africa's biggest luxury coach company met with JMPD officials to begin on a journey that will make sure that South Africans travel safely and timeously.

The marriage will see JMPD testing all SA Roadlink coaches at least four times a year and intensifying the operation during peak season.

By law, bus companies are required to test their coaches once a year.

"This is a start of a good relationship we hope to have with SA Roadlink in making sure that South Africans travel safely. We have undertaken to make sure that SA Roadlink coaches are tested at least four times a year and that every coach that leaves their premises is roadworthy," said JMPD spokesperson Wayne Minnaar.

A follow up meeting with the two parties has been scheduled for February where details of the partnership will be outlined.

"SA Roadlink is committed in improving and assisting government and its agencies to make sure that South Africans are safe while they are in the hands of SA Roadlink. It is our intention to drive a road safety campaign with JMPD in the future," said SA Roadlink CEO, Allan Reddy.

For more information contact Lumka Oliphant on 083 554 8808
